AMUSEMENTS

Polly Tonight.
"Polly of the Circus" is a genuine metropolitan success. It stayed a solid year at the Library Theatre, New York City. During that long period the business was enormous, indicating that theatre patrons really enjoyed Margaret Mayo's delightful romantic comedy. The production to be shown at the Colonial Theatre tonight is the original, except for rebuilt scenery. Miss Elsie St. Leon, who achieved splendid success in the title role last season, will be seen again as Polly. She will be assisted by the famous St. Leon family and a capable company of carefully chosen players.

The Traffic.
The Traffic has proved itself to be unquestionably the biggest and truest of all the recent plays that have sprung into existence and that deals with the question of white slavery which is now attracting so much attention throughout America and which is going through a rigid investigation by the Federal authorities. "The Traffic" will be seen at the Colonial, November 22. Miss Marshall wrote the play only after years of investigation as a settlement worker, and she depicts in an intensely dramatic and interesting way white slave conditions, as they actually exist. She has disguised nothing—in fact, in more than one instance she is brutally frank, but she drives home a message and a warning to both men and women that isn't soon forgotten. The "Traffic" is produced with all the touch and atmosphere of a Belasco and the splendid cast that Mr. Walter Newman has provided, is in a measure greatly responsible for its success. Seats now on sale.

The Missouri Girl.
It is hard to conceive of a play that contains so much comedy, such a clean consistent plot and so many peculiar characters as The Missouri Girl, which will be seen at the Colonial Monday night, November 24. Bargain prices, 35 and 50 cents.
